individual wearing an orange sports jersey, later identified as Mr. Arredondo, was putting something black into his front waistband. The officer noted the color and shape of the object was consistent with being an automatic pistol.

As the officer got out of his vehicle, he drew his duty weapon, began running after Mr. Arredondo and the other two subjects, giving the commands for them to stop and get on the ground. Mr. Arredondo ran down the alley behind the store, and slowed down near the area of two 7-Eleven garbage cans in the alley. The officer in pursuit of Mr. Arredondo radioed other units to advise the defendant was armed.

During the search, the officer saw the soles of someone's feet under a parked pickup. The officer ordered the subject to come out from underneath the pickup and he complied. Mr. Arredondo was placed in the patrol vehicle and his Miranda warnings were read to him. He was questioned regarding the orange jersey and he denied knowing about it. Mr. Arredondo told the officer he was running because he was on Federal probation and was scared. One of the officers then reported he could see an orange shirt stuffed in the drive shaft of the pickup, directly above where Mr. Arredondo had been laying. The jersey was removed and matched the one he was wearing during the incident.

The officer then went back to the garbage cans by the 7-Eleven store and located a black Glock magazine on the ground. The officer then looked inside the garbage can and saw a black Glock handgun on top of the trash. As the officer was getting ready to photograph the magazine and gun, a loose round was located near the magazine. The located firearm was a .45 caliber ACP, the chamber was empty, the magazine was full and the loose round was also a .45 ACP.

At the police station, Mr. Arredondo was still willing to speak with the officer without a lawyer present. According to the report, without mentioning anything about a gun being ditched, he immediately denied ever possessing a firearm. The defendant explained he fought with the Sureno gang member at the 7-Eleven and that he ran after hearing the commands to stop. The defendant stated he ran because he was Federal supervision and was afraid he would get caught for fighting. Mr. Arredondo continued to deny possessing the gun.

Mr. Arredondo was arrested and charged as noted above and he remains at the Yakima County Jail.

Mr. Arredondo is scheduled to appear in the Yakima County Superior Court for arraignment on the above-noted charges on October 15, 2012.
